“ In my family we called him T. The things I remember most about T. is his friendliness, he never met a stranger. T. loved to dance to Caribbean music and I would laugh so hard watching him Whine in the kitchen while he cooked. He loved to cook and clean. He was very domestic in that way. T. would dress up with nowhere to go, because he liked to look his best. T. was a hard worker and was dedicated to his job at the Radisson Hotel where he worked for over 20 years. He once was nominated and won employee of the year by the CEO. He was well loved at his job. During the holidays he would work, but also take Miguel to all the holiday parties when he was baby up to when he was about eight years old. T. was a very proud man and proud of his kids. Whenever Miguel would visit him at work, T. would introduce Miguel to co-workers, which sometimes took an half hour to forty five minutes. LOL Everyone knew Miguel was Tyrone's son. Years later, I would meet people who knew Miguel from his father' workplace and they would ask me if Tyrone was his father, because they would see Miguel at the Radisson with Tyrone. T. was so proud to learn that Miguel was in school for IT and was looking forward to going to Miguel's graduation this year. Over the years my friends and family would say, I saw T. today and he had a smile on his face as usual. You were always a friend and a family member to my inner circle. T. thank you for being an uncle to my nephews, a brother to my siblings, a son to my mother and a father to our son. You will be deeply missed by Miguel, me, and my family.

Rest in love.
